C. MONOLOGUE SCRIPT

Are you familiar with that sound? Yeah, it's a Tyrannosaurus Rex, one of the dinosaur species believed to exist in the Jurassic period. Now we can only see them at the movies. But don't worry, you can almost feel their existence by visiting me, the American Museum of Natural History. Located on the Upper West Side of Manhattan, I have the largest collection of dinosaur fossils in the world.

Upon entering the museum, there is a stunning display of giant dinosaur skeletons. The display illustrates the iconic battle of Barosaurus, the tallest dinosaur, to protect her young from Allosaurus. But your adventure to the dinosaur world doesn't stop here. You can travel through time by exploring my vast collections of paleontology, starting from the Paleozoic Age through to the Ice Age.

Are you tired of exploring my dinosaur collection? It's not yet time to finish! There are more permanent exhibitions to explore in my 28 interconnected buildings, with more than 33 million specimens.

First, I have the Biodiversity and Environment Hall, which displays the spectacular life on Earth. After that, you can see the wide variety of amazing creatures at the Birds and Reptile and Amphibians Hall. The next hall is the Earth and the Planetary Science Hall, which showcases specimens of planetary science. The next hall is..... Yep, that is the Human Origins and Cultural Hall. The next exhibition is the Mammal Hall. At the Rose Center for Earth and Space you can explore the universe and the galaxies. The next halls are the Theodore Roosevelt Hall, the Discovery Hall and there are still many more.

Besides these permanent exhibitions, I still have special exhibitions, a giant film screen, and the Hayden Planetarium Space Show.

These amazing exhibitions have been in at least 5 movies that were filmed on my location. One of them is the famous movie, "Night at the Museum", which describes the adventures of Ben Stiller, as a watchman, among our collections that come to life at night.

What are you waiting for? Come and explore the amazing history of nature with me.
